scene. Firefighters wear self-contained breathing apparatuses while they are in close proximity to the fire, all the while carrying heavy equipment.

"It's almost like you're doing weight lifting while wearing a breathing apparatus. The harder you breathe, the faster the oxygen goes through, so you really have to control your breathing the entire time," she said.

"Nine times out of 10 when you go in those burning buildings, it's dark. There's not a lot of light," Collins said. "So you're feeling (the way forward), you're using your voice and feel instead of vision. So going back to your breathing is a really good way to bring you back to center."

Firefighters learn to depend on each other at a fire scene.

"When we go into fires, we crawl on the ground. Then we have our right or left hand on a wall, and our other hand is sweeping the area to try and feel where we are and what's going on," she said. "You have your lead, who's going to tell the person behind them, 'pull to your left,' or 'wall ahead,' things like that. You really have to trust the person in front of you."

It's a physically demanding job, and Collins said she has had to figure out what she can and can't do.

"The first house fire I went on, I realized, when it came to pulling roof and things like that, I'm not tall enough. So I find other things (to do)," she said.

Pulling roof means removing roof sections to ensure there's no undetected fire above.

"You do find out really fast (that) physically it is a lot of work, and you want to make sure that you're in shape," she said.

Fires don't take the firefighters' schedules into account.

"It (a fire call) can come at any time," she said. "You always have to kind of be ready."

She cited the case of a fire on Easter Sunday.

"All of us had to leave our families to go fight that fire," she said.

So it's important to have a good support system at home, families who understand firefighters have to answer the call when it comes, she said.

GCFD 5 volunteers have other jobs, and in most cases employers allow the volunteers to answer fire calls during work hours, she said.

Even though it's challenging Collins said she would encourage women to volunteer.

"It's very rewarding to give back to the community you grew up in," she said.

"The one thing I love is knowing that every time I walk into a fire, that I have six or seven of the guys that have my back. In any situation we walk into, I have a whole bunch of big brothers standing behind me, to help me do whatever I need to do," she said.

"It's a second family to me," she said.
