COASTAL LOWDOWN Minus tides reveal wonders

STORY and PHOTOS by LUKE WHITTAKER Chinook Observer

PACIFIC COUNTY — Some of the lowest tides of the year occurred during the last week of July, revealing sites usually submerged under several feet of seawater and drawing curious explorers to the coast.

The peak low tides occurred Friday, July 23 with a -1. negative tide at 6:54 a.m. followed by a -1.7 minus tide Saturday morning.

Footprints in the sand revealed that the cave at Waikiki Beach at Cape Disappointment State Park was among the most popular early-morning destinations for curious explorers, many equipped with cameras and cell phones to document the dramatic changes sea-level changes have on the coast. Others found their way to Beards Hollow, where they discovered tide pools teeming with life, including crabs, sea stars, anemones and mussels. The spectacle only lasted about two hours, as the tide change began to re-cover what had been revealed by the retreating waves.

Troupe refurbishes former church in South Bend

By PATRICK WEBB For the Observer

SOUTH BEND — Willapa Players are on the move. But only "next door."

The Raymond-based theater group is becoming a South Bendbased troupe.

And it's all thanks to a church whose dwindling congregation caused remaining members to conclude they could no longer support their building.

Russell Wiitala, president of the players, is full of praise for the South Bend United Methodist Church for letting go of the substantial building at 124 Spruce St. South. Church leaders sought a new owner for the building, which is a distinctive presence on a small hill overlooking the main highway through town.

Players bought it The $55,000.

The next series of significant minus tides will occur Saturday, Aug. 21 (-1.4, 6:38 a.m.) and Sunday, Aug. 22 (-1.4, 7:20 a.m.). There are -1.2 tides on either sides of those dates.

THEY'VE GOT THE BLUES AND THAT MAKES THEM HAPPY

Band members tune up for Nahcotta festival

By PATRICK WEBB For the Observer

Note: In a respectful nod to the specific musical passion of the subjects of this story, the Blues is capitalized in all references.

NAHCOTTA — The Blues Brothers were on a mission from, well, you know. Clint Carter and Don King are on a mission to spread the Blues.

And that doesn't mean making people unhappy.

Quite the reverse.

The two retired gentlemen are lifelong musicians. Get them talking about the importance of the Blues and they will speak until ... well, actually they would not stop.

Carter is the driving force behind the Peninsula R&B Festival. The fourth annual event won't happen until Aug. 27-28, but he and others are busily getting the tent and stage ready at the Port of Nahcotta.

King, a bass player, is a professional musician who ran a recording studio in his native Seattle. He retired to the Peninsula in 2017. Guitarist Carter made music, too, but had many other jobs, including running the Imperial Schooner restaurant in Ilwaco for a dozen years. During that time, he staged the Blues & Seafood festival in Ilwaco, which ran until 2016.

Calling their band North Coast Blues, they play alongside Ron Barnes on keyboards and saxophone and Fred Jacobs on drums. They will perform with guest lead guitarist Eric Rice from Seattle.

As well as the host band, the lineup includes Blues artists from Portland, the Willamette Valley and South Puget Sound. Headliner is Scott Holt of Tennessee, who traveled the world for 10 years with Blues legend Buddy Guy before going solo.

Rewarding time

Asked about the rewards of staging the event, Carter is ready. "The big thing for me is seeing 500 or 600 people with huge smiles on their faces," he says. "When you hear the applause for any band and see them dancing like crazies...."

Fine acoustics

"This is going to play so well," Wiitala enthused, looking round the torn-up interior and marveling at the acoustics.

The retired rural letter carrier is 69 and has been a Raymond-area fixture since 1980. He became involved with the troupe about three years later and has written plays, directed productions and loves appearing on stage.

He is spearheading the effort to revamp the1911 building to make it ready for a production early next year. He is especially complimentary about the contractor, Josef Overby, for his support of the group.

Others are pitching in, including enthusiastic members Todd Parkins and Mike Wagonblast.

"It's in really good shape and many of the 'fixes' are minor," Wiitala said. "We have got so much energy and great support of the community." The American Legion post and Eagles Aerie are among groups which have pitched in.

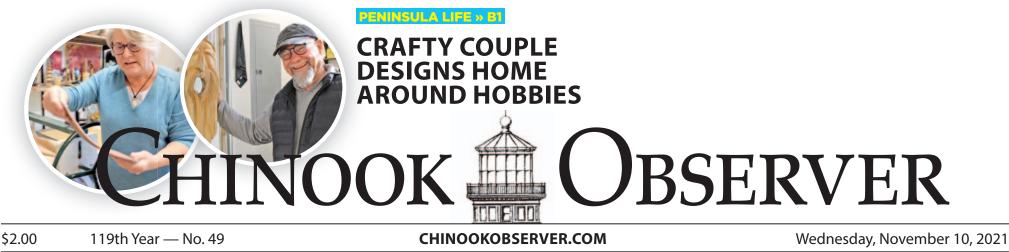

Building an 'icon'

The current emphasis involves building a sturdy stage in the sanctuary and repositioning pews so that all theatergoers can comfortably view the onstage action. Space will be designated for wheelchairs.

A balcony, with space for a light control booth, will mean it will be able to seat more than 100.

Longer term, work is planned in the basement, which Wiitala hopes can be converted into dressing rooms. It could be used for other arts activities like a dance studio. There is a separate basement kitchen.

"We won't do all things at once," he said. "My hope is this building becomes an icon of Southwest Washington for everybody," he said, believing word of mouth will spread a reputation for entertaining shows reputation regionally. "That's my hope and dream

PACIFIC COUNTY - Officials with the U.S. Navy's Third Fleet visited Pacific County on Nov. 4 to meet with local officials, including the Pacific County Emergency Management Agency (PCEMA), to survey potential landing sites for natural disaster responses.

The survey looked at local beaches for options for the Navy to land amphibious vehicles on, such as hovercraft particularly after a Cascadia Subduction Zone earthquake — to deliver emergency supplies, according to PCEMA Director Scott McDougall.

"The fleet that is hosted off the Pacific Coast is the U.S. Third Fleet," McDougall said. "They have a variety of assets that they can make available to do Joint Logistics Over the Shore (JLOTS), and they have these - which are pretty amazing — what are called landing craft air-cushions or LCACs."

Runners behind them included junior Asher Ingram of NW Christian Lacey who had defeated him at the League meet and was just five seconds behind him at District.

But the manner of the race wasn't what anyone expected.

When he won the 2B title in 2019, his strategy was to stay with the front pack, positioning himself for a kick down the hill to the finish.

But after the 112 boys packed along this year's start line settled into a somewhat slower rhythm, it was just Quintana and sophomore Will Halpin of Liberty Bell out in front.

Adventure or ordeal? Ilwaco woman recalls Cold War stunt

Deprivations at the forefront of 1961 memories

By PATRICK WEBB For the Observer

ILWACO — Ask Sharon Petersen what she was doing exactly 60 years ago, and you'll get a knowing smile. And then the memories flow.

As a young mother of two, she was taking part in an unusual radio station stunt that reflected the tense history of the era.November 1961 was a key moment in the Cold War, which pitted the world's two superpowers, the United States and the Soviet Union, in standoffs which could have led to nuclear annihilation.

PATRICK WEBB

Sharon Petersen shows her delight as she looks over mementos of the two weeks in 1961 she and her family spent in a bomb shelter to simulate survival after a nuclear war. Among her prized possessions are giant reel-to-reel tapes of the broadcasts on her husband's Spokane radio station. She had them converted to CDs so she can listen any time.

Earlier that year, Cuban exiles backed by the U.S. government had failed in an armed invasion of the island in a fiasco which became known as the Bay of Pigs. In August, the Soviets had erected the Berlin Wall, a literal version of what British leader Winston Churchill had earlier called an "iron curtain" between Eastern European Communist nations and the free West.

County recovery far outpaces state

Main street retail 39% above prepandemic record

LONG BEACH - Compared to the depths of despair suffered by many Pacific County business owners during the societal shutdown in the spring of 2020, this year has surged to record heights on the strength of factors including robust tourism, new residents and federal economic stimulus.

While Washington state as a whole enjoyed a 33.6% rebound in business in the second quarter of 2021, Pacific County was up 50.5%, climbing from $74 million in taxable sales in the dismal spring of 2020 to an all-time high of $111.2 million this spring. This was the third best recovery among the state's 39 counties, trailing only

San Juan's 64.4% and Klickitat's astonishing 123%.

Washington residents may often resent sales taxes, but when counted up by the Department of Revenue they present a front-row view of exactly how well businesses of all kinds were doing, typically about three months after each quarter ends. Looking behind instead of ahead, these Quarterly Business Reviews are what are known as a "trailing indicator," but are a sign of what direction the economy is heading.

Pacific County's previous record spring was in 2019, when the total was $81.7 million. In the pre-Great Recession year of 2008 — sometimes remembered as a high-water mark for our economy — spring sales came to $59 million.

Leslie Long drove with 6-year-old daughter Sabella from Rosburg Sunday to witness one of the Long Beach Peninsula's best Halloween traditions. The headless horseman is a legendary figure that dates back well beyond Washington Irvine, who wrote "The Legend of Sleepy Hollow" in 1820. But locals also know it is a fixture of the Halloween season in Chinook, where the splendid equine and its ghostly rider have reportedly been making their memorable appearances since about 2008. And, unlike others who might want to reveal all, we aren't saying who, how, what or why.

New market and deli coming to Long Beach

LONG BEACH — A new coastal market and deli will soon be serving Long Beach.

V's Coastal Market & Deli is anticipating a soft opening in November. Owner Stephanie Vincench has been busy in recent weeks redesigning the familiar building at 1404 Pacific Ave., formerly Brown's Coastal Corner Market and Deli.

"We're loosely aiming" for a near-term opening, she said.

From Seattle to Long Beach

Vincench, 41, moved to the Long Beach Peninsula with her husband and two kids, ages 3 and 4, from Seattle in August.

"We were here over the winter vacationing. The last year in Seattle was really rough. We always loved Long Beach and had been coming to visit for the last nine years," she said.

"We were here in January and the kids had a blast, so we came back a couple months later and thought 'We could do this, we could move,' so we started looking at properties and saw that this was for sale.'

Vincench, who formerly worked as a financial controller for restaurants in Seattle, was drawn to the opportunity to operate a small business in a coastal community.

"We saw it as an opportunity to run a business and start fresh," she said.

as sandwiches. We're going to feature more salads, greens, grain bowls and have a daily soup. The goal is to have quick service and be more health-focused," Vincench said.

The store will feature Pacific Northwest-based products and a broad array of everyday groceries.

"As far as the grocery items, we're trying to feature more small-business, local products but be able to have everything," she said.

"So if people want to have eggs and bacon, they can still get it all here. We want to be able to cross-utilize the products in the store with the deli."

Pandemic presents unique challenges

Among the biggest hurdles for the new business has been getting commercial equipment delivered and finding local

"The deli case and new reach-in cooler, nobody could guarantee they were going to be out here, not even a rough estimate. They said they could be in Seattle in five days, so we rented a big truck. My husband had to drive to Seattle and pick up the equipment," Vincench said. "Just starting from scratch and reaching out to vendors. We've had some vendors come to us but when you're trying to feature more local things, you kind of have to go to them."
